MARLEY TO STAGE 45th HOMECOMING

Marley is going to have one grand celebration on the Fourth of July in Storm's grove. This will be the 45th Annual Home Coming and basket picnic. Everyone is asked to fill their baskets, put on their common picnic clothes and have a real time.

Here is where will be settled both farm and city relief. It is all one here.

Rev. J. J. Hitchens of Joliet will give a real patriotic oration. The Men's Club of St. Peter's Lutheran church of Joliet will furnish an orchestra, a male quartet, comedy sketches and monologue entertainment.

The midget "Jack Dempsey" and "Gene Tunney" of Joliet will put on the gloves for a few rounds.

This will be a day of funnystunts and contests and a live wire ball game will be an added attraction. Mokena vs. Homer and New Lenox will be the contending teams.

Many noted people from abroad are coming.

The program says the activities will begin at 10 A. M. Dinner promptly at noon. Orations at 1 P. M. Ball game at 2 P. M. Please be on time for all performances. The refreshment stand will be complete.

The big blowout is being sponsored by the Marley Brotherhood. "Nuff said".

Three Fires In New Lenox Twp.

Fire, caused by lightning, burned a barn on a farm operated by Arthur Osmus near New Lenox late Sunday afternoon, destroying 19 dairy cows causing a loss of about $6,000.

The fire also destroyed nearby wooden silo, milk house, the loss being partly covered by insurance.

Leigh Jones is the owner of the farm.

Mr. Osmus returned from New Lenox about 4:30 Sunday afternoon parking his car outside the main barn and went into the house. The family was eating supper when they saw flames shooting from the cow barn. The fire had made considerable progress before it was discovered and efforts of the neighbors were directed toward preventing the flames from spreading.

A mysterious fire broke out in a large barn on the Edward Francis farm in New Lenox township a week ago Friday noon. The flames made such rapid headway that it was impossible to save the building which together with a number of out buildings burned to the ground. Two horses burned and some hay and grain. Walter Marshall resides on this farm. He and his men were just returning home from the field when they saw the barn burst into flames.

Lightning struck a barn on the Henry Mosel farm about two miles northwest of Marley early last Tuesday morning. Two mules and horses were burned, also hay and grain. The loss is placed at several thousand dollars. About $2,000 worth of insurance was carried on the property.

Entertains Palos Woman's Club

The Palos Park Woman's Club met for a chicken dinner with Mrs. Geo. Ward in her lovely home in Brookwood, Thursday June 20th.

After the dinner which was served at noon the party motored to Jay Morton's Arboretum, just beyond Hinsdale, Ill.

A most delightful afternoon was spent viewing this immense museum of living trees and shrubs which consists of 2400 acres, overlooking artificial lakes and streams, with 10 miles of circling drives winding thru this beautiful garden. There are 210 botanical specimens from all over the world, including China and Japan; 312 species of lilacs; 125 specimens of spiraea; 125 of willows. A magnificent setting was observed made by the white pine, hemlock, blue spruce and various varieties of the Pine family. Flowers were seen of all descriptions.

Altho the public is not admitted to the grounds without a permit, Garden Clubs are invited to inspect this botanical garden.

Mrs. Stone of Beverly and Mrs. W. B. Combs of Tinley Park were among the guests.

Tinley Lions At Joliet Banquet

The Joliet Den of Lions entertained more than 300 visiting and local Lions and their wives at a banquet and program in the Chamber of Commerce Friday evening in observance of "District Governor's Night", and as the finale to a quiet but intensive expansion campaign.

The Tinley Park Lions Club was well represented at this gathering, many of the members and their wives attending. Lion President Henry Vogt gave a very interesting address on what the Tinley Park Lions are doing and called special attention to the big Fourth of July program which the Lions of that town are sponsoring and he received a big hand at the conclusion of his talk.

Hundreds of pluggers advertising the Tinley Park Fourth of July celebration were passed out among the guests so that Tinley is well advertised.

Eighty-nine new members of the Joliet Den were introduced at this meeting, making a total of 110 members in the Joliet Den Lions, the largest membership of a local service organization.

Edward Wunderlich, captain of one team and Frank G. Brummond captain of the other team, were presented by Lion O. K. Takie Jr., field director from Lions International, who had been aiding in the campaign. Mr. Wunderlich's team was responsible for 46 new members and Mr. Brummond's team obtained 43 members.

Mr. Wunderlich alone secured 36 new members and as a reward was appointed official delegate of Joliet Den Lions to the Lions' international convention in Des Moines, Iowa, in July. Mr. Brummond was a close second, having himself secured 33 new members. The club voted to send Mr. Brummond as an official delegate to the convention in appreciation of his work.

Edward T. Brewster, recently elected president, presided and officially welcomed the guests, there being five in District Governor Joseph Adams party including Mrs. Adams and daughter of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Green of Elgin, in addition to large delegations from the newly organized New Lenox club, Tinley Park, Aurora, Blue Island and Chicago Heights.

Each group representative spoke briefly and the Rev. Joseph Clare, president of the Aurora Lions club led in community singing. Lion A. Krueger, accompanied by his sister Miss Myrtle Krueger, sang, the Joliet Lions quartet directed by Mr. Wunderlich and composed of Mr. Wunderlich, Mr. Brewster, Dr. H. Mattei and Fred Krahn rendered a number of fine selections. They were accompanied by Mrs. Brewster. Miss Gladys Arbeiter gave readings.

District Governor Adams commended the club on its achievement during the past week and spoke enthusiastically of the future undertakings of the organization now being contemplated. Commenting on the power of organization, the speaker sketched the growth of the Red Cross, organized in Switzerland in 1854, the Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army and other groups which have grown from small beginnings. "The Individuals or small groups who start these worthwhile organizations are the pioneers in world wide movements of service," he said.

Tinley Woman Overcome By Gas

While Mrs. Wm. Wannemacher of Tinley Park was doing the family washing in the basement of her home last Friday she was overcome by gas. She managed to get out doors and collapsed. Henry Boldt administered first aid after which Doctors Ickstadt of Tinley Park and W. V. Hedges of Frankfort were summoned. Mrs. Wannemacher is recovering nicely.

Why No Fourth Celebration?

Editor News-Bulletin:-
Do you know why our town of Mokena is asleep this year by not having any kind of a Fourth of July celebration?

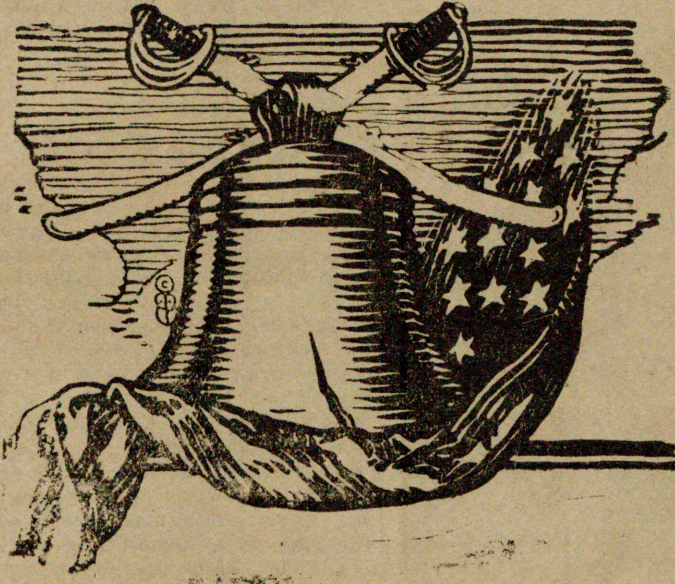

Frankfort and Tinley Park can put on celebrations and it is a puzzle why we must go out of town in order to attend a celebration.

If Mokena would put on something that would draw a big crowd it surely would be a help to our local business people.

Why don't Mokena put on a good program with a parade, fireworks, music, speaker etc., as does Marley?

What makes our village dead? What can be done about it?

IN MEMORIAM

KNIPPLE RAYMOND—
In sad and loving memory of our dear son and brother, Raymond J. Knipple, who was killed one year ago today, June 29th, 1927, by an Engineer of the E. J. & E. R. R. Engine No. 599.

Our son was coming homeward,
When his daily work was done,
When came that speeding pusher
And took the life of our dear son.

If you had blown your whistle
Or you had watched your speed
And had controlled your engine,
Our son would now be with us, indeed.

We were told it made you nervous
And that your hair turned gray,
If you had a heart within you
You could not run another day.

One year has passed away,
Dear son, our hearts are broken,
Since that terrible day,
June 29th, 1927.

No one knows how much we miss you,
No one knows the bitter pain,
We have suffered since we lost you
Life has never been the same.

Often we pause and think of you,
And think of how you died,
To think you could not say good-bye
Before you closed your eyes.

No one knows the silent heart aches,
Only those who have lost can tell
Of the grief that is born in silence
For our dear son we loved so well.

Friends may think the wound is healed
But they little know the sorrow,
That lies within our hearts concealed.

DAD, MOTHER and BROTHER,
Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Knipple and son,
Orland.

The Mokena P. T. A., are considering presenting a play in the near future to raise funds. At their regular meeting Tuesday night the play proposition was discussed. Plans for increasing the membership were also discussed and one of the ideas advanced was to choose two teams and which ever team gained the most members should be banqueted by the losing side.

Ona E. McGovney, member of the school board said the board members had been subjected to severe criticism recently on account of a certain song used in the school song book, some parents deeming the song objectionable.

Mr. McGovney expects to have the plans for the new school on hand by the next meeting which will be the latter part of July and will discuss same with the P. T. A., members.

Lesson for July 1

THE EARLY LIFE OF SAUL

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 6:4-9; Phil. 3:4-6; Acts 22:3, 27, 28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Paul as a Child.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Boyhood of a Great Preacher.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Saul's Training for Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Influences Shaping Saul's Early Life.

I. Israel's Responsibility With Reference to God's Laws (Deut. 6:4-9).

1. Central truths to be taught (vv. 4, 5).

(1) Unity of God. "The Lord our God is one Lord." He is God alone, therefore to worship another is sin.

(2) Man's supreme obligation (v. 5). God should be loved with all the heart, soul and might, because He is God alone and supreme. This being the first and the great commandment, we know what is man's supreme duty.

2. How these truths are to be kept alive (vv. 6-9).

The place for God's Word is in the heart. In order that it may be in the heart (1) "teach it diligently to thy children" (v. 7). The most important part of a child's education is that given in the home in the Word of God. How sadly this is neglected today!

(2) To talk of them in the home (v. 7). This is the right kind of home life. How blessed is that home where God's Word is the topic of conversation.

(3) Talk of them when walking with our children and friends (v. 7).

(4) Talk of them when retiring for the night (v. 7). The last thing upon which the mind should rest before going to sleep should be God and His truth.

(5) Talk of them when rising in the morning (v. 7). How fitting that God should speak to us the first thing when we awake!

(6) Bind them upon thine hand (v. 8). This was literally done by the Jews even to the wearing of them in little boxes between their eyes.

(7) Write them upon the posts of the houses and on the gates (v. 9). Such a remembrance of God's words would create a spiritual atmosphere most desirable.

II. Saul's Ground of Confidence (Phil. 3:4-6).

He had everything a true Jew gloried in.

1. Circumcized the eighth day (v. 5). This was the literal requirement of the law for those born under the Abrahamic covenant.

2. "Of the stock of Israel" (v. 5). This shows that he was a true Jew, related to the chosen people by blood and birth.

3. Of the tribe of Benjamin. Benjamin had always remained loyal to the national customs. The first king of Israel, whose name he bore, was of Benjamin.

4. "Hebrew of the Hebrews" (v. 5). This showed that he was of Hebrew parentage and not a proselyte.

5. Touching the law, a Pharisee (v. 5).

The Pharisees were of the sect most zealous for all the rites and ceremonies of Judaism.

6. "Concerning zeal, persecuting the church" (v. 6).

He proved his zeal by positive effort to stamp out that which was threatening Judaism.

7. "Touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless" (v. 6).

So exactly had he conformed to the outer requirements of the law that he was consciously blameless.

III. A Sketch of Saul's Life (Acts 22:3, 27, 28).

In this sketch he gives us a glimpse of his birth, education and citizenship.

1. His birth (v. 3).

Though born at Tarsus, a city outside of Palestine he had been brought up in a strict Jewish home. Tarsus was the capital of the province of Cilicia. It was a city of prominence because of its commerce and culture. It was one of the three principal university cities of that period.

2. His education (v. 3).

Born out of Palestine, he was sent to Jerusalem for his education. This fact shows that he belonged to a zealous family of Jews. His teacher was the great Gamaliel, a doctor of the law and the leader of the strict sect of the Pharisees.

His citizenship (vv. 27, 28).

He was by birth a Roman citizen because Tarsus was the capital of a Roman province. In the providence of God the great apostle to the Gentiles was given the prestige of a free-born citizen of the empire. He was loyal to his country and proud of his citizenship.

The Joy of the Lord

Oh, believe, the joy of Christ is within you; give it room, let it spring up within you like a well of living water, and you will rejoice in the Lord always, and again rejoice.—G. H. C. Macgregor.

DAME FASHION MATCHMAKER; RAYON PRINTS FOR SUMMER

DAME FASHION is proving to be a very successful matchmaker. She is arranging at present especially interesting matches between hats and parasols, or, when fancy dictates, she relates the hat to the blouse, or perhaps it is a hat, belt and bag which are ensembled. Most popular of all is the hat and scarf of matching material, or at least these adopt the same color scheme or decorative motifs.

Now that the mode insists upon the costume presenting a united scheme here uses for its medium a stunning surah silk whose stripes are in bold Spanish colorings. By the way, have you heard that surah silk is again in fashion? Well, it is.

The lovely new rayon weaves such as have so conspicuously entered into the fabric realm are creating quite a sensation in the fashionable world. They are not only supremely attractive, but their adaptability and the wide variety they offer, have gained for them emphatic approval. It should be remembered that rayon of color and design from top to toe, stylists are not only employing every fabric medium, but they are encouraged to call into play every form of cunning handcraft.

Hand painting is especially contributing its share of beauty and interest to the new ensembles and in most unique and unexpected ways. For instance, a navy and white polka dot frock is topped with a navy felt hat which is painted in white dots duplicating in appearance those of the silk of which the dress is made. Then again a summery dress of colorful print has a parasol with it of the same material. The accompanying large floppy hair picture hat is painted in flowers identical to those shown in the silk for the dress and the sunshade.

The chapeau with a scarf painted in matching motifs is also a prideful achievement of creative genius. Embroidery is another just as fetching means of relating hat to scarf. The de luxe set shown to the right in the picture is fashioned of black taffeta, with highly colorful and exquisitely wrought solid chain stitch embroidery.

In this procedure of fashion's matchmaking gay silk prints are playing a stellar role. A parasol of lively is in no sense an imitation of silk. It is not an imitation of anything. It is an entirely new production. It stands on its own merits, having an individuality all its own, being the result of modern invention which has achieved for it certain qualities not possessed by any other material.

The fact that the best designers both here and abroad are creating of rayon crepe, rayon voiles, rayon taffeta and rayon lace, costumes for every fashionable hour, adds to the prestige of these interesting new weaves. To illustrate, this picture shows a strictly sports costume and a charming dressy afternoon frock and they are both rayon. For the summertime dress to the right the stylist uses a handsome rayon voile, which is as exquisitely textured as the finest sheerest silk chiffon. The remarkable thing about rayon voile is that it launders perfectly. That is one of the fascinating features of rayons in general, even those which have the aspect of expensive satin or brocades can be tubbed without fear of injuring them.

Rayon crepe, a plain color for the skirt, with a gorgeous print for the blouse, is the chosen medium for the two-piece sports costume shown to silk print with a hat to match, as shown in the picture, expresses utmost chic. Other combinations of print silks include soft, flexible sports hats heavily stitched, to complement oblong or square scarves, or if not squares then triangles of the silk.

Up-to-the-minute matching hats and scarves are made of vivid striped silks, or striking polka dot weaves, for stripes and dots are "the rage" this season. The model to the left shown the left. When one realizes that this costume can be satisfactorily washed, the advantage of using it for practical, wearable daytime costumes is readily sensed.

Not only is rayon woven into fabrics for informal wear, but it is interpreted in luxurious velvets, moires, satins and as before mentioned it takes form also in beautiful lace.

Garden Tractors Found Excellent

Great Labor-Saving Machine, Displacing Man and Horse Labor.

The garden tractor is a thoroughly trustworthy and intensely practical machine, and deserves the attention of vegetable growers who are looking for a way to cut production costs. That is the way D. B. Lucas of the agricultural engineering department, New Jersey state college of agriculture, Rutgers university, evaluates the device which has been on the market but comparatively few years.

Great Labor Saver.

In a statement for New Jersey farmers he says that the garden tractor is a "great labor saving machine which displaces both man and horse labor, for it will do much of the work that is now done by hand and will also work nicely in vegetable crops where horses cannot be conveniently used. Also, where short working seasons make it undesirable to keep horses, the garden tractor is an immense boon.

Only an exceptional horse will work in row widths of 15 inches or less. This has led to much hand cultivation where intense production necessitates rows as narrow as 10 or 12 inches. One wheel or two-wheel garden tractors may now be had which are adapted to almost any practical condition. From one to three rows can be cultivated at one time. Shallow plowing may also be done by some of the light cultivators, but it is usually a good practice to use a standard plow and do a thorough plowing job every few years.

Cost Is Important.

The cost is an important consideration in the purchase of a garden tractor, especially when it will be used only for a small home garden. Good machines with cultivating attachments may be had for two hundred dollars and up. A thorough demonstration, in which the buyer himself handles the machine, is important in making a satisfactory selection.

Warn Shippers Against Altering Certificates

Cautioning shippers of hay against altering shipping point inspection certificates issued under the federal-state hay inspection service, either by erasure or addition, or in any other manner, the United States Department of Agriculture has just published the following facts in a recent case of this kind.

A federal-states inspector inspected a lot of about twelve tons of hay on a farm for which he issued a certificate, grading the hay U. S. No. 2 Timothy. The shipper subsequently shipped a carload of hay to Chicago, and inserted on the inspection certificate the number of the car, thus making it appear that the hay had been inspected in the car.

Examination of the hay upon arrival at destination disclosed that it graded variously U. S. No. 3 Timothy Clover Mixed; U. S. No. 2 Timothy; Threshed Timothy (not hay), and U. S. Sample grade Timothy (badly stained, musty). This seemed to indicate that there was some hay in the barn which had not been inspected and had been either negligently or improperly mixed with the inspected lot and loaded in the car.

In any case, the department points out, the addition of the car number on the certificate was improper as it imported that the hay had been inspected in the car, which was not the fact.

Soil Best Adapted for Growing Soy Bean Crop

If soy beans are planted on clean soil and broadcast at the rate of two bushels per acre, one can expect to get from two to three tons of hay per acre. Soil that will produce good corn will usually raise soy beans satisfactorily. Soil that is too acid to raise alfalfa or sweet clover will usually produce a satisfactory crop of soy beans if other conditions are good.

The ground which is sown to soy beans should be carefully worked before the beans are sown. Frequent harrowing is necessary to keep out the foxtail and similar grasses until the beans get a good start.

Agricultural Squibs

Dig a few dandelions out for your chickens. Green feed is good for them.

Limestone and inoculation are two requirements for success with sweet clover.

It requires about the same preparation to make a good lawn as it does a worthwhile vegetable garden.

The larger second growth of red clover is of particular advantage as it comes at a time when pasture is badly needed.

Anyone who has hauled manure mixed with long corn stalks knows how much trouble the stalks are. With the silo there is no such waste.

In preparing hay for market or use on the farm, a much higher percentage of the valuable leaves can be saved if the hay is baled, as the loss of leaves by successive handlings of the loose hay is avoided.

MOSAIC MENACE TO RASPBERRIES

Much of the difficulty in maintaining quality and yields of raspberries, particularly red raspberries, in New York, has been attributed to what is called "running out," but it has been found that an infectious disease known as mosaic is responsible. Also, it is now known that healthy stock can be kept reasonably free from this disease. Thus it is possible to grow any variety and obtain its usual yield and quality, says W. H. Rankin of the experiment station at Geneva who spoke recently at Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y.

Mosaic spreads from plant to plant only when plant lice carry it. The lice themselves do no harm. A plant once inoculated is diseased throughout and becomes less productive, although it may live for several years. This mosaic disease has caused growers to give up raspberries as unprofitable, so the present raspberry acreage in New York is low.

Obtaining stock from fields known to be practically free from mosaic is the first step in control. Inspecting the planting the first two years may show a few diseased plants. These should be removed carefully so that the lice are not shaken off. The roots of red varieties must be dug to prevent diseased suckers from coming up. In western New York these measures insure little loss from mosaic.

A few varieties remain free from mosaic or are little damaged by it. Such varieties are recommended, especially for the lower Hudson River valley where mosaic is difficult to control by removing the diseased plants.

Propagating Grapes by Means of Cuttings Best

The accepted and orthodox way of propagating grapes is by means of cuttings. Notwithstanding this, however, the grafting of grapes may be practiced for one or more of several reasons. Established vines of undesirable varieties in the vineyard may be top worked to more desirable varieties. Invariably European grapes are grafted onto American grape stock in order to offset or avoid the ill effects of phylloxera injury. This is the customary practice whether the grapes are to be grown in America or Europe. The phylloxera is a louse which, during one stage of its life history, attacks grape roots. It is "100 per cent American," and was not known in Europe until after America was explored and some of our native grapes infested with phylloxera were carried to Europe by returning explorers. American grapes have endured its parasitic attacks so long that they have become partially immune to its injurious effects. And this immunity makes American grapes valuable as stock upon which to graft the susceptible choice wine grapes of France and other continental countries.

Pruning When Knife Is Sharp Gaining Favor

Prune when the knife is sharp is a good working rule for the orchard, believes T. J. Talbert of the Missouri College of Agriculture. If the work is done properly, it may be helpful at any time of year. Formation of main branches and the elimination of thick clusters that shade the fruit, as well as the removal of dead or badly diseased branches, may prove profitable at any time of year.

In general, the principal work should be done after the leaves drop in the fall and before they appear in the spring. At any time during the dormant season when men may work comfortably out of doors, the pruning work may be carried on with profit.

Labor is more easily secured in the fall and winter than in the spring so that large commercial orchards must prune when the labor is available. However, pruning can be done at any time before growth is fully started.

Horticultural Hints

If you want good apples, spray. Insects are no respecters of persons.

Planting for best results should be done as early in the season as the ground can be prepared.

In the case of fruit trees as well as practically all fruits in the Middle-West, spring is the best planting season.

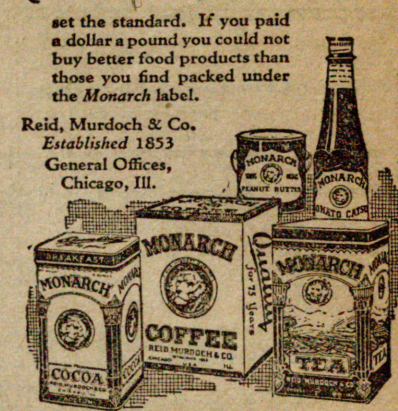

One-year-old apple trees cut to 40 inches when set develop more branches the first year than trees cut to 30 inches.

Efficient cold storage plants with facilities for precooling, icing, and reeling fruit have been tremendously developed in recent years.

More bearing apple orchards have been thoroughly pruned this winter than ever before. This should mean a higher percentage of good apples.

Stayman and Delicious apple trees demand well-aerated soil. The fruit becomes small after a few years when these varieties are planted upon soil that is too dense.

THE RETURN OF ANTHONY TRENT

STORY FROM THE START

Anthony Trent, once master criminal, now reformed, returns to New York after four years' absence. He learns his friend, Capt. Frank Sutton, is in Sing Sing. Trent is surprised to find his New York apartment occupied by a stranger, Campbell Sutton, who represents himself as the brother of Frank Sutton. Trent is asked by Campbell to force a confession from Payson Grant, whom he accuses of having crookedly obtained all of Frank Sutton's property and then married the latter's wife. Trent starts on a campaign to accomplish the downfall of Grant. He learns that Captain Sutton has escaped from Sing Sing and later, to his surprise, finds that Campbell is really Frank Sutton. Trent takes his place in society as the opening gun of his campaign against Grant. He becomes a house guest of the Grants. Trent discovers in Mademoiselle Dupin, Natica's French instructor, a friend of the old criminal days. She is now going straight. Trent is suspicious of a man known as Yeatman, ostensibly in the Grant household as a detective. Anthony realizes Yeatman is a crook, who is planning to rob the Grants and their guests.

She looked at him with a calmness and lack of interest that she knew must surprise him. He was the kind to frighten women with physical violence, and had been used to inspiring fear.

"If you need money, I have none. If you need help, I shall not give it." "You aristocrats have spirit," he admitted. "Listen. I am of les ouvriers. I was a fisherman at Heyst before I followed a woman to Bruxelles and strangled her because she laughed at me. You would not think to look at me I am so strong. Well, Mademoiselle Dupin, I am not going to strangle you yet."

Another scarlet-tipped cigarette was tossed from the window. There was no evidence of haste about him. He showed that he could afford to take his time.

"You say you will not help me. Very good. I do not need your help. I have already arranged everything. You have no money? What do I care? I am a man who likes the aristocrats."

"Pierre Redlich," she said slowly, "you are talking folly. You have no hold over me at all. I shall not help you and I shall not hinder you so long as you remain a detective. If you steal, you place me in peril, and I dare not risk that. Let us call it a truce. You have no power over me. Make no mistake about that."

He picked up the orange packet. "Here are twenty cigarettes left. I shall sit here and smoke them. When I have finished, you will come with me."

She did not understand what he meant. But she was oppressed with the certainty that he would not threaten idly.

"Are you, then, so anxious to go back to France and finish your term? They do not pamper prisoners there as they do here."

"That I know," he retorted, "I have tried them both. No, madam, I am not anxious to go back. And I shall not. I used to wonder why others succeeded always and I was so poor and obscure." Redlich touched his forehead. "It is here that success is manufactured. Education, madam, knowledge. We Flemings learn languages easily. I have studied. I speak five as well as you do. Particularly well do I speak Spanish. It is to a land where they speak Spanish we are going."

"We?" she queried. "Pierre Redlich, you have become insane."

"No, madam. I am neither insane nor inflamed with drink. What I say, I mean. I have had you in my heart since I first saw you. I recognized you here before you saw me in Mrs. Grant's room. You were sitting by the sea reading, with no thought of danger. It was only when I came into Mrs. Grant's room that I pride was gratified. I saw that you had forgotten me. That pleased me. I saw you were frightened, and that pleased me even more."

She glanced at the alarm clock. It was midnight.

"I am tired," she said. "If you do not go I shall summon help. On one side the housekeeper sleeps, and on the other the butler. I have only to shout loudly and they will come."

Again there was that baffling, confident smile.

"Madam does not believe me when I say I have gained much wisdom since last I saw her. I will prove it. Miss Brewen is not there. When she went to her room tonight she found a rat there. It terrified her, and she sleeps in another part of the house. How do I know? Because I killed it for her. I also placed it in her room. As for the butler, he knows now that I am here as a detective. I have commanded him to sleep near his footmen so that he may observe their movements. I have told him I suspect them."

She was convinced that he was speaking the truth.

"This leaves none but you and me on this corridor. The quarters of the servants cannot be entered from it. You did not observe in your terror that I locked the door as I passed in."

There is the open window, madam. Jump if you will. The marble terrace twenty meters below will make a tender deathbed.

She believed implicitly that she was trapped. Redlich was of the sort who have brought the terrorizing of women to a fine point. He rose and urged her to the window. She could barely see a white light waving gently at what she supposed was the bottom of the garden.

"It is the masthead light of my vessel," he said. "She is called La Belle Alliance, and I have wondered why she had that name. Now I know, madam. You and I shall be 'la belle alliance.' On board are a half-dozen men who do as I command. Presently I shall take you to them and say: 'Here is the woman I love.' Tomorrow I will come back for the jewels they pay me to guard."

"Do you suppose you can carry me there and not be seen?"

"I know it. Did I not tell you I had grown careful. You knew me in the old days, madam, when I was no better than a savage. Then, I should have beaten you senseless and carried you off. Now, I shall not hurt you."

He moved forward, twisted her arms behind her and pressed over her mouth and nose a chloroform-saturated towel. She fought for a long time, but the buzzing in her ears grew louder, and presently her muscles relaxed and consciousness left her.

Anthony Trent had been glad to get to his room early. By eleven all of the guests had retired. Always a lover of the sea, Trent pulled the wicker chaise longue to the window and lighted a cigar. He had turned out the lights the better to enjoy the night, the stars and the flickering lights of passing vessels.

Suddenly there floated onto the balcony the glowing end of a cigarette thrown from some other open window such as this. Five minutes later another fluttered by to the terrace below. After similar intervals the stub on the balcony was joined by another. By twelve o'clock Trent had counted a dozen descend; somewhere above him a man was smoking cigarettes at the steady rate of twelve an hour. . . . With the last crimson end, came a sudden gust of wind and blew it into the room clear over Trent's head.

He rose from his seat to extinguish it ere a hole was burned in the carpet. It was the end of a brand of cigarette used almost solely by the French. One day he had smelled the undisguisable odor and found old Gimbret puffing at one; Gimbret said Mr. Yeatman had offered it. It was unlikely that anyone else would have such a supply or consume them so resolutely.

Yeatman occupied a small room at the head of the first flight of steps leading from the main hall. Under no conceivable circumstance could a cigarette thrown from the small window of this room drift down to Trent's balcony. Gravity forbade, for one thing.

Humorous Talk Went Unheeded After That

A good Bret Harte story is told by William H. Crane, the veteran actor, in "Footprints and Echoes." Bret Harte was engaged to deliver a humorous lecture in a small western city. Just after he had started, one of the deacons sitting on the stage grabbed hold of his coat and whispered:

"Hold on a minute, I want to make an announcement."

Harte was very much astonished and stepped aside, while the deacon took the center of the platform.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, after a pause, "is Mr. Rogers C. Jones in the hall?"

There was a protracted pause and, as Mr. Jones failed to respond, the deacon continued:

Three people used the rooms of the floor above that on which Trent's suite was situated. He knew that immediately above him was the room of Mademoiselle Dupin. It was conceivable that she smoked. But these coarse cigarettes in such unbelievable quantity were, he felt certain, consumed by some one else. Circumstances pointed to Yeatman. And what could Yeatman be doing there?

Very quietly, Trent crept to the little balcony and listened intently. He could barely hear some one talking rapidly in French. It was not the beautiful French of Madame de Beaulieu. The speaker was fluent enough, but lacked that delicate rhythm of the language as spoken by an educated woman.

When Trent had first examined his suite he had noticed that at this southeastern corner of the building a steel rod, a third of an inch in thickness, part of a device for protection from lightning ran down to the earth. This rod of steel passed the edge of his balcony some two feet distant. On its way to the cornice above, it passed Mademoiselle Dupin's window at an equal distance. A man with a clear head and a sense of balance might make an ascent or descent without much danger.

Straining his ears, Trent was sure he heard, later, the higher-pitched voice of the woman for whose safety he was exercised. It was when it was raised in undisguised fear that he acted. Climbing back into his room, he drew on a pair of heavy gloves. Then he started the ascent of the rod. It was not easy to draw his face level with the window ledge. Fortunately, he kept himself in perfect physical condition. As he pulled himself breast high to the sill the sweet and cloying odor of chloroform met him.

Mademoiselle Dupin was lying on the floor unconscious. Over her, Yeatman was stooping, tying her, hand and foot, with ropes adjusted with the sailor's dexterity. There was evidence of a struggle. Chairs was overturned and a vase of cut flowers was broken.

The horrified sight kept Trent immobile for the moment. While he watched, Yeatman picked up the unconscious girl, opened the door and switched off the lights.

Anthony Trent climbed into the room as quickly as he could and opened the door. In the corridor outside was in darkness, in the distance his sharp ears heard, distinct in the stillness of the silent house, the cautious tread of the burdened man half muffled by the rugs.

Yeatman, as he opened an unlatched door, had no idea the silent Trent was within a few yards of him. He kept to a little path which ran by the brick wall. A quarter-mile distant was the beach where his boat lay. By a code of flashlight signals he could summon help and be on board La Belle Alliance within a few minutes. He would, of course, come back to the house and see that the room just left in such confusion was put in order. He had no desire for local police interest.

Half-way between house and ocean was a fresh-water bathing pool with garden marbles set about it. On one of these Pierre Redlich placed the still unconscious girl. He was alarmed at her continued stupor. The thought that she might be dead chilled him. He leaned down to hear the heart beat. And, as he stooped, he was conscious of a tremendous blow behind his ear. The swift appreciation of the pain was succeeded instantly by unconsciousness. Pierre Redlich dropped as one dead.

He was profoundly unconscious as Trent untied the girl and used the same ropes and gag for her assailant. He did not feel himself lifted by Trent and carried to the brick wall and dropped on the other side of it. Here, concealed in a part of a neighbor's garden devoted to the raising of vegetables, his dreamless sleep continued.

Mademoiselle was awakened from the anesthetic by the dashing of cold water on her face. Out of the mists of memory she thought she heard Trent's voice. Then the fear of Redlich returned and she began to struggle.

"It's all right, you poor child," Trent said tenderly. "I'm here and he has gone."

He assisted her to a seat nearer the house where their voices could not carry to Redlich's vegetable bed. She was still unstrung and nervous.

Chip Off the Old Block

While the spelling lesson was going on, the teacher gave the class words to use in sentences. Addressing ten-year-old Junior, the drum major's son, she asked, "Junior, will you use the word banquet correctly in a sentence?"

After deep deliberation and a thought concerning his father's vocation, Junior replied: "When the speaker stepped upon the platform the 'band-quit.'"

The opening of State Highway No. 143 from Benton to Harrisburg will reveal to passing motorists the first dwelling house to contain glass windows erected in Franklin county. The ancient building still stands at West End, a small station town on the Eldorado division of the Illinois Central railroad.

The building was erected by the Jones family, and J. K. Jones, eighty-seven, first station agent of the Illinois Central at West End, still resides there. The land was homesteaded from the government and has never changed hands except to transfer from father to son.

The house was built of hewn logs and has weathered the sun and storms of more than 100 years. The deed to the land, bearing the signature of President Adams, is a treasured possession of the family.

High-powered rifles and sawed-off shotguns are at hand for employees of all banks of Jackson county. The arms and ammunition were placed in the banks recently under a plan of protection recommended by the Illinois Bankers' association.

Volunteer deputies, most of whom were former soldiers, will be ready to use the arms in case of robbery. They are all deputy sheriffs, and have the co-operation of county officials. The identity of the deputies is kept secret.

Arrangements have been completed for physical and mental examinations of a thousand babies at the State fair in August, it has been announced by Dr. Isaac D. Rawlings, state health director.

More than $500 is offered in awards to high scoring children. Twins, triplets and families of six children are eligible to compete for special awards. Registration is open on a state-wide basis and a silver loving cup will be presented to the mother of the state's most healthy baby.

Leaders from all divisions of America's agricultural industry from West Virginia, Nebraska, New York, and other widely scattered points, came to Urbana recently to attend the Eleventh annual conference of the American Country Life association held at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

Rural urban relations was the general theme of the meeting and separate sessions were arranged on town-country co-operation, the rural home, farm income and farm life, rural youth, rural churches, rural leadership training, rural government, community planning, rural health, rural recreation, utilities and transportation, and community score cards.

More than 1,000 persons, interested in these phases of agriculture, from 30 or more states, attended the meeting.

As it seems to be the fashion for various cities to celebrate the birth of the Republican party and to claim the distinction of being the place where the great political organization sprang into being, Aurora has decided to be included in the group and has chosen Thursday, September 20, as the time. Claims for this distinction for Aurora are based on a meeting held in the First Congregational church on September 20, 1854, just 74 years ago. An authorized "people's" convention of the Second congressional district was held with 207 delegates who not only adopted the name "Republican" but proclaimed the doctrines of the new party.

Secretary of State Emmerson received bids recently for between a million and a million and a half sets of automobile plates for 1929. The price for plates last year was nine cents a set. After the contract is awarded the successful company will submit samples and the colors to be used next year will be chosen by the secretary.

It won't be long now before danger warnings are removed from the north side of the statehouse. Workmen have begun to erect the high scaffolding to the third story of the capitol to replace crumbled stone which has been falling at intervals for several months.

Bids were opened recently by the state division of highways for the construction of 147 miles of pavement, 23 miles of grading and 55 separate bridges. Officials of the division have announced that a preliminary analysis indicated that satisfactory bids were received on a majority of the projects. On a total of 116 miles of pavement for which apparently satisfactory bids were submitted, the cost per mile including cement averaged $26,746.

In the third special session in as many months, the general assembly listened to verbal fireworks set off by Senator John Dailey, Peoria, and Senator James J. Barbour, Chicago. The contest was launched when Senator Dailey discussed the report of the special revenue commission, which recommended the passage of bills giving the state tax commission authority to order reassessment of property in Chicago and downstate. Before the lively tilt had ended, the revenue bills had been sent to second reading for consideration.

"Fair to poor" was the best that could be said of farm crops in Illinois on June 1, it is indicated in the joint crop report of the state and federal departments of agriculture issued recently.

Corn is making a favorable start, but the early season prospects for small grain, grass and fruit crops are below average, the report said.

Winter wheat, rye and hay are spotted to light. Other small grains, pastures, apples and pears are uneven to fair. There will be few peaches except in the southern district.

Small grain and grass growth has been slow, due to the cool dry spring season and some thinning of stands by April frosts.

Rainfall has been deficient and uneven since last winter. General crop prospects have improved somewhat following general rains since June 1.

Construction of the hard roads from Lincoln to Mt. Pulaski, a distance of 8.2 miles, will become a part of the state's program for this year. The contract for the pavement and two bridge sections were let recently by the state division of highways.

The contract for the paving was awarded to C. H. Atkinson Paving company, Watertown, S. D., for $179,248.58. The contract for the bridge on 117B was awarded to the M. and P. Construction company, Rockport, Ind., for $53,650.26, and the bridge on section 117C will be constructed by A. C. Woods and company, Rockford, Ill. The price was $11,592.05.

The department also let the contract for grading on Route 142, section 114A, Hamilton county, to Cameron Joyce and company, Keokuk, Iowa, for $89,482.20.

Placing of a cross alongside the roadside for each person killed in an automobile accident within the last ten years would mean one to approximately every three miles of improved highway in the United States.

This statement issued recently by the national headquarters of the American Automobile association is based on a death toll on the streets and highways of about 175,000 within the last decade and a present system of 600,000 miles of improved roads.

The A. A. A. also pointed out that if these crosses were confined to one transcontinental highway—such as the Lincoln highway, stretching 3,200 miles across the country—there would be over five crosses to each mile of roadway.

Illinois now has the foundation for a permanent gallery of Illinois art; exercises were held recently celebrating the opening of the collection at the state museum. The ceremony marked the close of the second annual exhibition of 300 paintings, drawings and works of sculpture of the Illinois Academy of Fine Arts in the state museum gallery. A feature of the program was an address by Lorado Taft, noted sculptor. Four art works have been donated to start the permanent collection and announcement of several others made possible through artists' co-operation soon. The donors are known as Friends of Illinois Art. The works are valued at between $2,000 and $3,000.

The following contracts have been awarded by the state division of highways:

Route 165, section 127X, McLean county, pavement; to Cast Stone Construction company, Eau Claire, Wis., $120,341.44.

Route 95, section 128A, Fulton county, grading; to Feinerr & Luick, St. Louis, $42,375.88.

Route 95, section 128B, Fulton county, bridge; to A. P. Munsen, Marion, Iowa, $21,319.30.

Route 95, section 128C, Fulton county, bridge; to A. C. Woods and company, Rockford, $6,489.46.

Route 173, section 131D, Boone county, bridge; to G. C. Fairbro, Champaign, $94,120.29.

Soldiers and sailors, who have received compensation for personal injuries, may not hold the state liable for further consideration, Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom has ruled. His opinion was given to Carlos E. Black, adjutant general of Illinois. The question was whether a former soldier, who had already received compensation, could force the state to pay additional damages after he had left the service of the state.

Apiary inspectors of the state department of agriculture have inspected 77,250 hives in the state, of which 3,517 were found infected and were treated or destroyed.

The season's work in protecting the apiary industry against this contagious disease began as soon as the weather opened, and the apiaries considered the most likely to reveal disease received attention first. For this reason, the chief apiary inspector, A. L. Kildow, believes that the general condition through the state is much less serious than the first reports indicated.

In the midst of a simple but impressive ceremony, the large granite boulder which will mark forever the spot on which Abraham Lincoln addressed the people of Rushville on October 20, 1858, was unveiled recently. The boulder bears a bronze tablet on which the following inscription is found:

"From this spot Abraham Lincoln addressed the people of Rushville, Oct. 20, 1858."

"He also practiced law in the courthouse which formerly stood on this spot."

They Brought Order Out of Chaos After St. Francis Dam Disaster

Many Lives Saved By Switchboard Heroines and Telephone Crews Quickly Restored Service in Santa Clara Valley

Repairing San Francisco Circuits

Repairing Telephone Lines at Castiac

By JOHN B. O'BRIEN

A CANYON devastated, a valley from half a mile to three miles in width and about sixty miles long desolated, entire towns and villages laid waste, tragedy exacting a toll in human life that exceeded that of the great Mississippi flood of a year ago, and property loss estimated at not less than $10,000,000 and as high as $20,000,000—that, in brief, is the story of the St. Francis Dam disaster in California.

But it isn't the real story of how tragedy descended upon the peaceful valley of the Santa Clara River between midnight and dawn of Tuesday, March 13, bringing with it a swirling flood which swept everything before it and left behind stark ruin. The real story is one filled with deeds of mighty heroism, acts of sacrifice, struggles in darkness and terror, tales of stirring instances of devotion to duty, the individual acts of brave men and brave women who, forgetful of danger to themselves, displayed the courage, the initiative, the efficiency and self-sacrifice which fills every American with a sense of pride and a feeling of exultation.

A dam, spanning the San Francisco Canyon and impounding a part of the Los Angeles water supply, collapsed soon after midnight, a dam that had been completed less than two years before at a cost of one and a quarter million dollars. Instantly, some twelve billion gallons of water were released from an elevation of 1,800 feet to seek its way, regardless of man and his works, to the sea some sixty miles distant. Like a tornado the onrushing waters crashed their way, carrying everything before them, sweeping on and on leaving behind only a deep layer of yellowish silt and scores of inhabitants who had been carried to their doom.

Operators Stick to Posts

There is only one thing that travels faster than a flood. That is a warning by telephone, and if it had not been for the telephone and the part that the heroic operators played at the time of the St. Francis Dam disaster, the loss of life would have been appalling. Many of these girls, on duty during the night at their switchboards, had no way of knowing but what the water would rise so high as to sweep away the buildings where they were located and drown them at their posts of duty, but they stayed at their boards, sending out their warnings and appeals for aid, and because of their bravery and loyalty, hundreds of lives were saved.

The inhabitants of the communities in the Santa Clara Valley were, for the most part, asleep in their homes and had it not been for the telephone people who labored so unselfishly and without rest, many of these people and especially those living in isolated farm houses, would not have known of their danger until it was too late. Just how many hundreds of lives were saved by these warnings will never be known, nor perhaps will the best stories of heroism ever be told, but to the operators particularly is due special recognition which the public is always free and ready to bestow upon those who serve it well.

Many Acts of Heroism

There were many outstanding accomplishments. At Santa Paula, Louise Gipe, Night Operator, received the first news of the disaster. Her prompt and cool transmission of warnings to people to seek higher ground at once is credited with saving hundreds of lives. Coming to her assistance and working entirely by candle light were two other operators, Margaret Osborne and Bertha Clarke, the latter reporting for duty when she knew her own home and all its contents were being swept away and not sure of the safety of her own family. At Fillmore, Mrs. Ethel Basolo, formerly employed as Chief Operator, returned to duty, leaving a three-months-old baby in the care of a ten-year-old child and with the added knowledge that her brother-in-law had been lost in the flood. Mrs. Carrie Johnson, Night Operator at Fillmore, was the first to notify the people at that point and at Piru. Miss Lucille Zahniser played a very important part in spreading the alarm at Newhall where she was loyally assisted by Miss Agnes Armstrong. Other operators at other points in the valley will long be remembered for the warnings they sent to the smaller communities. Without exception, these operators stayed at the switchboard, handling the traffic rush of urgent calls in spreading the general alarm. Every town, including and below Piru, got its first word of the coming disaster by telephone before the waters arrived, and as soon as the word came the local constables and other peace officers were notified and a general alarm was spread by means of sirens, whistles and bells.

The Fight to Restore Service

Adequate communication facilities are never more necessary than in times of emergency, and no sooner did Los Angeles receive word of the disaster than the work of rehabilitation began. The first telephone line went down at 12:45 a. m., March 13, and forty-five minutes later the first repairman was at the water's edge near Saugus. By 2 o'clock in the morning five trucks and fifty repairmen were on their way to the scene of the damage, and during the remainder of the night other truckloads of temporary insulated wire were sent to the flood area. More than half a million feet of temporary wire were laid hastily to patch up the damaged lines and thus provide the vital means of telephone communication. At one point, two telephone men voluntarily dove into the raging torrent of water, some ten feet deep and fifty feet wide, and swam to the other bank at dawn to start repairing inland telephone lines between Los Angeles and San Francisco, those lines having been entirely swept away at that point.

The fight to restore service went forward with such dispatch that by 6 p. m. of that day all circuits of the Los Angeles-San Francisco Valley lead had been replaced, and while this may not mean much to the ordinary layman, to the telephone worker it speaks volumes and to the people in the stricken area and their friends outside it is hard to visualize just how much it did mean. The work of restoring the avenues of communication went forward with equal celerity in the other suffering communities and, in addition, special telephone circuits were installed to take care of the Red Cross, newspapers, news agencies and Governor Young of California and his party who were stationed at Santa Paula.

So great was the national interest in the St. Francis Dam disaster that the Los Angeles telegraph office established a new record in the number of pictures transmitted to other parts of the country, with a larger total of photographs sent out at this time than at any time since its establishment in that city.

MOKENA M. E. CHURCH NOTES

Glen T. Beaty, Pastor
Morning Worship 9:15 A. M.
Church School 10:30 A. M.
The Sunday school picnic which was given through the Ladies Aid last Saturday was a decided success in every way.

The weather was threatening and in the midst of a sprinkle late in the afternoon the food and tables had to be moved into the church building. However, this was accomplished and much fun was had inside, though the skies cleared and the late evening was sunny. The Sunday school members were all given their dinner free as well as ice cream, soda and pop. The visiting people were asked to pay for their dinner. The proceeds after all expenses have been taken into account is thirty-three dollars. This money is used to defray the Christmas expenses of the Sunday School. It is the desire of all to thank all who made this possible by work, donations, etc.

Last Saturday morning a group of the boys met at the church with Mr. Beaty and proceeded to cut weeds and grass as well as to split a great amount of kindling and clean out the woodshed. Much credit is due these boys. A good job was done and a mighty fine example for others to help finish the cleaning up. Why not make the church grounds of Mokena the most beautiful spots of the village? At night the ladies gave the church building a thorough scrubbing, so that the church benefited by the necessary use of it for the supper at the picnic.

Rev. Beaty will occupy the pulpit as usual next Sunday morning. The service is at 9:15 o'clock and you will enjoy the freshness of the hour. Let's give the best of the day to the worship of God.

The St. John congregation is busily engaged finishing preparations for the big congregational picnic to be held this Saturday afternoon and evening in the village park adjoining the church.

Miss Francis Wachter has joined Miss Irene Castle's Girls Orchestra in Joliet. She plays the saxophone. This orchestra it is understood will play at the Rialto theatre in Joliet later on.

While Mrs. John Mattes was a guest at the J. Butler home Sunday she met with a peculiar accident at the dinner table. While coffee was being served a cup of hot coffee was upset while being passed over a high back chair and ran down her back, burning her very painfully.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. R. Mitchell and little son Frank of Chicago were guests at the Wm. Semmler home Sunday evening. L. G. Bruder had his horse entered in the horse show Sunday in Pilcher Park.

The dance held by the Mokena Men's club last Saturday was a record breaker 290 tickets being sold. The club is planning to hold a dance every Saturday night from now on.

The Hungry Four held a picnic Wednesday.

The Kitchen Band play put on by the Ladies of St. John's church Friday night was a big success in every way. The church parlors were packed to capacity. The ladies cleared over $106.00.

Wilbur Teske who is working in Chicago met with a serious accident Friday. He was caught in a sudden rain storm while leaving his place of employment and going to the depot. While running for shelter in a doorway he slipped on the sidewalk and struck a plate glass door. He put up his right arm to protect his face as he hit the door. His hand went thru the glass and was badly cut. He is unable to use his hand and will be laid up for a while.

Big Races at

Aurora July 4th

The Fourth Annual Auto Race meet to be held at the Central States Exposition Track on July 4 promises to be one of the big sporting events of the year in this section of the country, according to officials who are promoting the meet.

It has been rumored that many drivers of national as well as local fame will be entered here. The officials are doing everything possible to bring here some of the cars and drivers that were in the Indianapolis Races this year and last. If they are able to get some of these drivers the fans are assured of seeing some of the fastest and best racing cars that have ever been built in action on Independence Day.

Although definite plans have not yet been laid as to the prize money we are assured that it will be larger than in former years and this is certain to attract some of the best drivers in the country.

R. C. Brockwell of Lombard has already entered his fast racing car. It will be remembered by fans who saw the race last year that he was wrecked while in the lead in the final race. Less Allen will, also in all probability, be here with his fast Frontenac. This is the car that formerly held the world's record for the 100 mile run on dirt tracks. Allen also crashed up here two years ago in the 4th of July Meet when he was in the lead in the final race.

The American Legion of Aurora is planning this year one of the biggest Fourth of July celebrations that has ever been pulled off in this city. The affair is to be held at Exposition Park.

Already tentative program has been arranged that will be entertaining and exciting to all. The auto races will be held on the track in the afternoon. The Legion will in all probability pull off a couple of special stunts between heats of the races. The afternoon program also includes some special athletic events after the races are over. Just what these events will be it has not been definitely decided but they are sure to be good.

In the evening a big night show will be held in front of the grandstand. The program for the evening will include Auto Polo, Boxing, music and one of the biggest fireworks shows ever seen in this city. The evening program is to be the big event in the celebration. Every one is cordially invited to this celebration and the officials say that this is to be the biggest and best ever held here.

Sandalwood

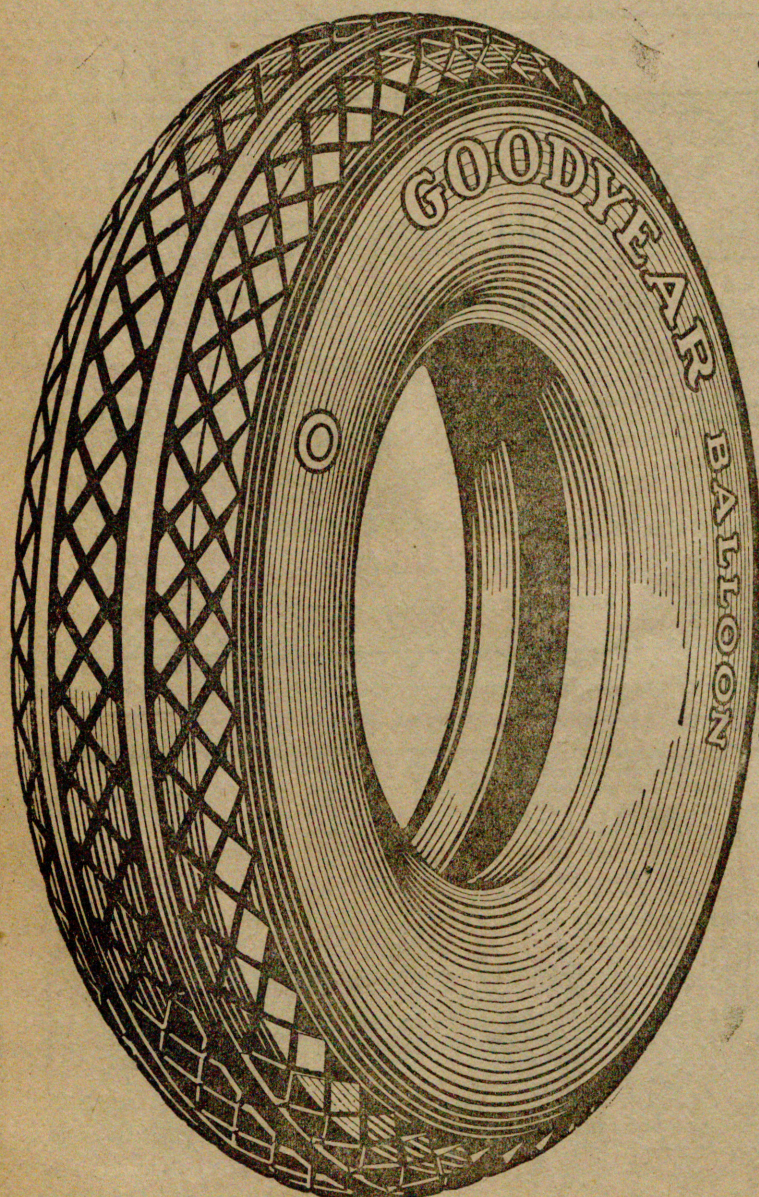

Sandalwood is used in ring and handkerchief boxes, and for the sticks of fans. Its delicate fragrance has made it extremely popular among women who dislike ordinary perfumes.

Fourth Annual Aurora Auto Race

Aurora, June 26. Special to The News-Bulletin.

The fourth annual auto race meet to be held at Exposition track on July fourth will be one of the biggest and best auto meets ever held in the state, according to officials who are promoting the event.

Already they have a very formidable list of cars and pilots some of whom are the best that the dirt track racing game has to offer. Among these pilots is Les Allen, who in the past few years has broken many world's records for dirt track races. Oscar "Swede" Anderson has also entered his fast racing car. This is the same speed creation with which he plowed thru the fence here in the fair meet last year. The car has, however been completely rebuilt and with the new improvements that the Swede has added it should be one of the fastest cars on the dirt this season. Allen was also wrecked here two years ago and when these two boys get together in a race most anything is liable to happen.

It has been rumored that Kohler from St. Charles will enter in Miller here for the meet. If he does there is sure to be plenty of excitement every time that the wheels turn. Kohler always is a sensational driver and when he bucks up against some of the other fast boys there is sure to be some fast driving with plenty of competition.

GOOD BREEDING IN BUSINESS—Phoenix (Ariz.) Record.

A recent newspaper article comments upon the "agreeable politeness" of telephone operators and wonders that the thousands of religious and social organizations in this country do not try to improve people's manners generally.

The telephone company, being farsighted, sees the virtue of politeness in promoting good will and improving service. Their girls speak millions of times a day to their customers, and soothe them by modulated, musical voices. Telephoning is a pleasure under the American system.

The newspaper struck nothing new in its comment. But it again called attention to the general competence and good breeding of the present-day efficient business corporations and their employees, from office boy to president. The result is good service and valued public esteem.

HOSPITAL OPERATOR'S BRAVERY SAVES LIVES

Although almost blinded by dense smoke and fairly gasping for breath, Mrs. Margaret Walkers, telephone operator at the Memorial Hospital in Albany, N. Y., stuck to her post recently so that she could send the alarm to the Albany fire department and notify all floors of the hospital of the peril to patients and nurses. She then groped her way through the pall of swirling smoke and poisonous gases that flooded the corridor, and it was with extreme difficulty that she found her way to the street. Through her efforts, however, the lives of the patients were saved.

TELEPHONE ACROSS OCEAN TO BUY NEW YORK STOCKS

Four times in a single day was the transatlantic telephone service used recently to place buying orders for securities in New York City. Three calls came to New York Stock Exchange houses from London, while the fourth came from Berlin to a house specializing in unlisted securities. A short time ago a trader on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange was also requested to purchase 3,000 shares of stock for a buyer in Berlin, who held the wire until he received a report that the transaction had been completed.

The Mokena village dads had hoped to make Mokena a dustless town this summer and a few weeks ago had 10,000 gallons of road oil applied on all the streets in the village at a cost of $750. Following the recent heavy rains the oil has all disappeared from the streets and the dust is starting to blow as before the streets were oiled. Last year an equal amount was spent for road oil. If street oiling were cut out for a few years perhaps enough money could be saved to pave a part of the front street. For money which has been spent on improving and maintaining this street during the past five years a good portion of this street could have been paved.

The Mokena R. N. A. has a drive on to organize a junior auxiliary.

A. E. Wachter has taken up a vacation job with the Joliet Engraving Company.

Mr. and Mrs. George Koeller, and daughter Almira have gone on a motor trip to parts in Canada.

Paved Streets

The Cheapest

Highland, Illinois, a city of three thousand population, this spring embarked a program to pave 13 or 14 miles of its streets. According to the mayor this will actually save the municipality money, because of the tremendous upkeep cost of dirt roads. In the last 11 years their maintenance has cost $160,000.

It has been the repeated experience of cities and towns of all sizes that money spent for hardsurfacing dirt streets, or salvaging worn-out paved ones is not an expense. On the contrary it is an economy and a dividend paying investment. In our modern life good roads and streets are as necessary as telephones and electricity.
